

Press Release

International Association of Women Police

52nd Annual Training Conference, 28th September to 2nd April 2014. Winnipeg, Canada.

The IAWP 2014 Executive Planning Committee have reviewed the registration fees for our 2014 IAWP Conference and are extending the early bird registration date to May 1, 2014.

Sandra Martin, Conference Director, Winnipeg Police Service said, “We want the conference to be accessible to as many officers as possible to enable them to access the high quality training that will be delivered in Winnipeg, Canada.

It will be a fantastic opportunity for all who attend to share experiences, learn from each other and to hear about some of the wonderful work that is on going across the world to support and encourage women police officers.”

Jane Townsley, President of the International Association of Women Police encourages as many women as possible to attend this year’s conference and take advantage of the extended ‘early bird’ rate.

“As President of the International Association of Women Police I know first hand of the enormous advantages that can be gained by learning from our colleagues, be they in the same town, country or even from the other side of the world. Being a police officer is a unique and challenging role and though the countries in which we work may be very different, we have all lived and worked through experiences that have shaped us into the officers we are today. It is by sharing what we have learned throughout our professional lives that I believe we can help and enrich each other into becoming better police officers.

As you will all know, the IAWP endeavours to highlight and enhance the recognition of women in policing, promoting professional co-operation, learning and networking.”
